ABSTRACT OF THE INVENTION

A method and apparatus for accepting an incoming message over a packet network and transmitting it over a circuit switched network using a highly scalable architecture. The architecture

5   utilizes a message queue and a router/filter within a private data network which is connected to an external data network such as the Internet, with separate outbound resource servers to provide the high degree of scalability, for handling a variety of message types.